A LIGHT SHINING IN A DARK PLACE; Slavery and the remelly, or priciples, and suggestions for a remedial code. He Samuel Nett. a treat, for there is something amusing as well pointments of the President. asserts-rather grants-the cvil of slavery, and and appreciated: suggests some remedies, not for slavery, but for the evils in it. No one disputes that there are the evils in it. No one disputes that there are the evils in it. No one disputes that there are the evils in it. No one disputes that there are the evils in it. grants too much, and his remedies will not work in practice, for they would create more evils than they would cure ; but he is so just and ; candid, there is so much that is true in his views, that no one will quarrel with his suggestions. He holds that slave-holding is not a crime, although slave-making may be. He holds it clear being crossed by thachan of for part that we must deal with the African race in America; that their emigration to the country of their fathers is impossible. He holds the emancipation of the negro impossible consistently with his own interest or that of the white race. He must be held to service, whilst the white man must give him support and protection. The author shows that the free States could not admit, with safety to themselves, a large population of negroes on an equality with white men. He shows that the negro has greatly improved in the condition of slavery; that the race is far better off than if the African had come here voluntarily, and remained free.

He contrasts the negro's condition with that of the Indian, and with his brethren, of the same race, in Africa. He condemns altogether the Northern crusade against slavery in all its political forms. He holds that the Federal Governm nt cannot touch the subject; and that our people have no more right to appeal to it against slavery, than they have to appeal to England and France. He moreover states, from the history of the whole controversy, that the anti-slavery crusade is idle; that the forces are too nearly balanced on either side in the Federal Government for one or the other to accom plish anything; that if an accidental majority could be obtained, it would lack the moral weight to carry out its purpose in the face of so formidable a resistance as it would encounter.

These views are well informed and illustrated.

and cannot be answered. Among men of sober sense and moderation, they will have their weight. They will commend themselves to the practical sense of the masses in the free States.

Indeed, a powerful minority in all of them, and a majority in three or four of them, have come to the same coucle ions by intuition. The more slavery is discusse I, the better it will be understood, and the less the South has to fear. The outery against agitation in the South is as unphilosophical as it is inexpedient; if by rolls up the whites of his eyes at the evils of a as unphilosophical as it is inexpedient; if by agitation is meant discussion. If the discussion is to be deprecated, then one of two things is to be deprecated, then one of two things is This extract that we have taken from the Journal of the Spurrous Court—the noblest and Market street, I down above Third.

We hold neither of these positions, and therefore we don't believe that the jeet. Besides, nothing can stimulate fanaties and demagogues more than the notion that the is termed. The worst possible way to meet an evil in the hands of an adversary is to let him know that you deprecate and fear it

We say that the condition of slavery as it exists in the South, is the very best for the negro that could be devised; and that humanity requires that slavery should not be kept hemmed than the present States have plenty of room for them. The negro has a right to his well-being under the direction and protection of the white man; and diversity of soil and climate is as beneficial to the negro as it is for the white race. The history of the negro race and present exgro is not the question with philanthropists, but his well-being. Too much freedom may be the worst of calamities. He hopes to see good men North and South concur in the same purpose and object on this subject, not to free the slave from bonds that are necessary for his well-being, ments are in the hands of the South; that ject. The author at last suggests a remedia the master, his right to the service of the slave, such questions to the city. It is not at all likely no remedy. It will create more evils than it he master. The law and public sentiment protects the slave from cruelty and inhumanity, as it protects the master, but interierence further ling out in the management of such relations. gestions from one who is generally so sound tended popular election. This vile abuse will be indorsed by no man in New York acquainted with Rynders, who has any respect for next triumph; and and knowrd indeed would I next begissature of Kentucky. After a gallant, determined, and honorable stringgle for more than twenty years, we won a brilliant, and I hope a permanent triumph; and awkward indeed would I make no such statements; and does any man fied, indeed, would you be, were I found so soon believe such slanders upon one cordially recommended by the first men in New York, for inelligence and integrity, for a very responsible that the best men in New York so far forget ing about him.

proposing to take the sense of the "qualified try and a home for ourselves and our children, voters" of this city, not only for city officers, but in several amendments of the city charter. Now, the sense of the qualified voters of this city is not likely to be taken on anything. It been suppressed by organized ruffianism. Electionshave been made a sham and a fraud, and no expression of the popular will. One ward of its vote; there is not an officer in it who is the unbiased choice of the qualified voters. There except by sufferance of its masters, and upor condition that the qualified voters vote right in the estimation of lawless vigilant committees. We say that the sense of the qualified voters is Recollecting the seenes at all elections for years past, partially excepting the last, proposing to take the sense of the qualified voters is a mockery and a sham. We trust the reign of ruffianism is past; but the terror and disgust inspired by for me about the qualification of voters. There is a vote in peace, or whether the polls are to be superintended by lawless vigilance committees, before whom the right to vote depends, not on the law or the judges, but on the color of the ticket. It is an unpropitious time to submit that the sense of the city can be had. It is of small moment what the legal qualifications of a voter are, when it has been shown that the will cure. It is the interest of the South to are valueless before organized violence and romote the well-being of the slave as well as fraud. These qualifications would be matters of interest, if there was any security that they would be respected or protected; but as elections have been carried on for years here, they are matters of little concern. We should come as near the sense of the city on all these questions submitted, by drawing lots, as by a preered somewhat from the effects of past transac tions; but the disgust at the shams called elections has not passed way, and the very reflection that the right of suffrage is liable to be trampled under foot, as it has been here and in other cities; that elections are liable to be attended with funerals and house-burnings, is well-calculated to inspire contempt for what is THE REGULAR ANNUAL MEET The editor of the organ gives a criticism called the sense of the qualified voters.
